ARMY AND NAVY NEWS

WASHINGTON, December 1.—Comprehensive and complete reorganization of the army establishment of the United States is the principal recommendation contained in the annual report of Secretary of War Dickinson for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, made public today. More officers, closer cooperation with the militia of the various States and a general readjustment of the locations of the various army posts are some of the crying reforms urged upon the attention of congress. The present distribution of the troops of the Regular Army, in the opinion of the secretary of war, is not only illogical, but offers a serious menace.

At the time of the last reports from the military departments, which were received in October, it was found that the Regular Army numbered 71,840 men, with 4200 officers, making a total force of 76,040, a net increase during the year of 3421. The figures do not include the 3485 men of the Hospital Corps.
Of the active officers of the Army, the report calls attention to the fact that 709 are detailed to special duty, nearly half of these, or 345, being distributed among the various schools of instruction of the regular establishment or acting as instructors in State educational institutions where a feature is made of military training.
While there were no serious breaches of military discipline during the year, Secretary Dickinson declares "that there can be no doubt that the discipline and efficiency of troops were lowered by the continued absence of so many company officers and the resulting frequent changes of company commanders."

The remedy for this condition, the report declares, may be found in increasing the number of officers and in the passage of legislation empowering the secretary of war, whenever the occasion demanded, to appoint retired officers to active duty temporarily. Under existing law a retired officer can not be made subject to orders, but his return to active service is entirely voluntary. In putting forward the need for such authorization, Secretary Dickinson says:
"While it is true that the duties performed by these officers are, in the main, of great importance to the Army or of material benefit to the country, the number of officers so separated from their regular duties with troops has now reached a point where it is beyond question that the efficiency and discipline of the Army are suffering therefrom. On June 30, 1909, more than a third of the captains of the mobile army were absent from their proper commands on detached service of such a nature as to cause them to be absent for some time. Including these captains who were temporarily absent from their proper commands, on detached service or otherwise, it is believed that less than one-half of the companies of the mobile army were commanded by captains."

The report also advocates more strenuous physical tests. President Roosevelt inaugurated an annual test to determine the physical fitness of officers, compelling them to ride ninety miles in three days or to walk fifty miles with in the same time. This, in the opinion of Secretary Dickinson, should be changed so as to compel officers to undertake a certain amount of prescribed exercise each week, the amount to be certified by the commanding officers in their monthly reports.
Cooperation of the Regular Army with the militia of the States is strongly urged. The secretary outlines a plan to accomplish this. He would have the country divided into a number of territorial and tactical districts, so that the militia may be conveniently combined with the regular troops stationed in those districts into permanent brigades, divisions and corps for instruction and tactical organization.

In conjunction with the headquarters of these combination divisions, the report advocates the establishment of supply depots, which can be drawn upon for the equipment of an army in time of need. At such depots supplies would be carried sufficient to outfit any additional volunteer force, up to a moderate number, that might be hastily recruited to complete the organization of an army corps.
Attached to the headquarters, also, the report declares there should be stationed a young and active officer of the Regular Army, whose duty it would be to instruct and direct the militia organizations in the corps district. Such an officer, it is pointed out, could issue no orders to the militia, but it is declared he should be given power to supervise the equipment and instruction of the volunteer troops of his district and be held responsible for their mobilization and general condition.
It is proposed to submit the adoption of such a plan to the governors of the several States. If the States announce their willingness to cooperate with the war department, steps will be taken toward putting the plan into action.

The matter of a general rearrangement of the various army posts occupies a prominent place in the report.
The secretary of war expresses his conviction that, as now situated, the army posts do not meet the requirements of the service, many of them being isolated and difficult of access.
The majority of these posts, he points out, sprang into existence because in the early days of the West the Regular Army was largely used for the protection of settlers from the Indians. The Indians have long since ceased to be a menace to the whites, and the posts have outlived their usefulness. The army authorities now set forth that tactical and strategic necessities require the locating of such army headquarters near the large cities, in close proximity to centers of transportation, and with a view to cooperation with the militia.

"Hence the three requirements," says Secretary Dickinson, "economy, possibility of rapid movement and training of the militia, would all be met in the most effective manner if the troops were stationed in or near the principal cities; and this is the course which the general staff believes should be pursued."
During the fiscal year three 8-inch and twenty-eight rapid-fire guns were added to the seacoast defense of the United States. It is also declared that the coast defenses in the country's insular possessions are in a forward state of construction. Special mention is made of the increasing efficiency in marksmanship shown by the men who serve the guns in the seacoast batteries and also in the field artillery of the Army. Praise also is given the men of the Regular Army for excellent records made with small arms.

Among a great number of other matters touched upon in the report, Secretary Dickinson speaks briefly but approvingly of the aeroplane and dirigible balloon as engines of war. He adds, however, that because of the necessity for retrenchment he will submit no plea to congress this year for an appropriation to admit of the purchase of a proper aeronautical equipment for the Army. He adds, however, that "the fact must be recognized that all first-class powers except the United States are providing themselves systematically with aerial fleets, Germany and France being notably in the lead."
